

CHAP I : Les climats passés de la Terre

Les variations climatiques sont étudiées à deux échelles de temps :

- le dernier million d'années où la continuité des enregistrements géologiques permet d'observer des variations climatiques avec une haute résolution temporelle de l'ordre de 1000 ans.
- le milliard d'années où les enregistrements géologiques permettent d'identifier les changements climatiques avec une résolution de quelques millions d'années

I/ Les changements du climat des 700 000 dernières années

A/ La reconstitution des climats du passés

1*/ La palynologie

L'étude des pollens déposés dans une tourbière permet de reconstituer le climat du passé : certaines espèces végétales sont caractéristiques de régions froides ou chaudes : la présence de leur pollen permet d'imaginer une tendance climatique. La variation de la répartition des pollens dans le temps permet de repérer aisément des modifications brutales du climat. On retrouve un changement brutal il y a environ 10 000 ans en Europe et en Amérique du Nord : passage d'un climat froid à un climat plus tempéré. Cette méthode ne permet de reconstituer le climat que sur une période brève et de façon très locale.

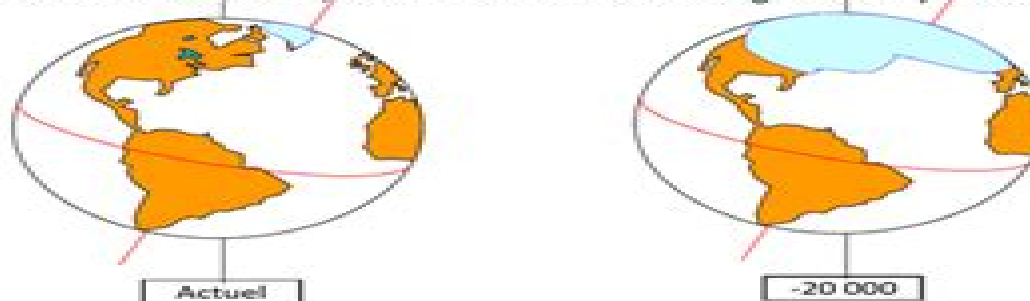

2*/ Etude de la composition isotopique des glaces polaires

Les carottes de glace forées dans les calottes polaires permettent de reconstituer les variations climatiques des 400 000 dernières années : on détermine de la composition isotopique de l'oxygène ($^{18}\text{O}/^{16}\text{O}$) de la glace et on en déduit les variations locales de la température au dessus des calottes polaires.

On peut utiliser la même méthode sur des carottes sédimentaires des fonds océaniques ou lacustre : la composition isotopique de l'oxygène ($^{18}\text{O}/^{16}\text{O}$) des tests carbonatés est proportionnelle à la variation globale du volume des calottes glaciaires et des glaciers, représentatives des changements climatiques à l'échelle de la planète. On peut ainsi remonter jusqu'à 700 000 ans.

3*/ Bilan : modification climatique des 700 000 dernières années

On retrouve par toutes les méthodes les mêmes informations : des changements climatiques importants au cours des temps géologiques, avec des périodes plus froide que la période actuelle (période glaciaire) et des périodes relativement plus clémentes (période interglaciaire). Au cours des 700 000 dernières années, 7 grands cycles se sont ainsi succédé, avec un dernier maximum glaciaire il y a seulement 20 000 ans.
