

Charlie and the chocolate factory

Charlie Bucket was a boy from a poor family who lived with his parents and both sets of grandparents in a rundown shack in a town where Mr. Willy Wonka's chocolate factory was located. The factory produced special sweets, and at one point, five golden tickets were placed in five chocolate bars. The five children who found the tickets would get to visit the factory.

Every year on his birthday, Charlie received a Wonka chocolate, but despite wanting it very much, he had never been lucky enough to get the golden ticket. One day, Charlie found a dollar on the street and used it to buy another Wonka chocolate. He ate it but didn't find the ticket. He bought another one and saw the shiny ticket inside. He went home and celebrated with his family and decided to take his Grandpa Joe with him to the factory.

After meeting Mr. Wonka, they went to the chocolate room, where there was a river of chocolate that Augustus fell into and was sucked up a pipe, and they didn't see him again until the end. There were also Oompa-Loompas in the room.

In the invention room, there was a gum machine that had the taste of three-course meals, and Violet tried it. When she got to the blueberry pie, she began to turn blue and swell up like a blueberry. She was taken out of the room and not seen again until the end.

In the nut room, there were squirrels trained to crack nuts. Veruca, being spoiled, asked her father for a squirrel, but they were not for sale. She went into the room, where all the squirrels pounced on her, and she ended up in the pit of dry nuts. Her parents went after her, and they were not seen again until the end.

In the television chocolate testing room, the chocolate was transmitted from the camera to the TV, and you could take it and eat it. However, you needed a very large chocolate bar because the TV shrank everything. As soon as he saw the process, Mike Teavee tried to go through the TV, and of course, he shrank a lot. To make him normal size again, he was sent through the gum-stretching machine. He was not seen again until the end.

Charlie was the last one left. Charlie and his grandpa were overjoyed when they found out that Charlie was going to inherit the factory. They flew home in a glass elevator.
