

Difference between customer-focused and operations focused companies

Criteria	Customer Focused	Operations Focused
Decision Making	Employees have the freedom to make decisions that benefit the customers	Every decision that differs from the normal way of doing business requires a manager's approval .
Training	Understands the importance of both soft skills and technical skills and spends time and money on soft skill training like customer service etiquette, and customer relationship building.	Spends time and money on building technical skills and improving product knowledge.
Decision Making	Hires candidates also for their core values and personalities which suits their mission and vision apart from just looking for skills	Hires people for their skills and technical expertise .
Decision Making	Prioritizes their employees and creates a happy culture for the employees.	Their culture is focused on their procedures, strategies and systems .
Decision Making	Recognizes the importance of customers and adapts an approach in which every employee irrespective of their teams embraces customer service .	Customer support or customer service is viewed as just another department or team .
