

1. Production Process Characterization

The typical development team spends time to plan and conduct a Production Process Characterization Study (PPCS) to understand key processes. This study leads to model-based learning principles and methods, models to design a manufacturing process and to guide manufacturing activities. The study leads to design at least an analytical data collection infrastructure and to design and build an integrated data system. The data integration layer enables people to build a complete set of process manufacturing systems.
