

BIRD BEAK

adaptations

BIRD BEAKS Name: _____

Adaptations are traits that help a species survive in their environment. Each of the three species described below lives in a different environment, which means that they will each have different traits that help them. Read about each of the birds to learn about how their beaks are adapted for their lifestyles.

Heron
Herons forage (search) for small things in the water. They eat mostly insects, fish, and shrimp. Sometimes they also eat small birds. They capture these creatures by performing a surprising action in the water with their beaks: called everything. While they stand in the water with their beaks slightly open to catch any prey. Sometimes a small fish will jump at the water or even charge their beaks under water to grab prey that is deeper below the surface.

Eagle
Eagles are carnivorous birds whose diet consists mostly of fish. Sometimes they even eat other birds. To capture their prey, eagles look down from the sky and grab the unsuspecting fish or bird with their talons (the sharp claws on their feet). When it's time to eat, the eagle holds the prey with one of its talons and uses the back of the beak with the

Flamingo
Flamingos diet consists of algae, insects, small fish. The shape of a flamingo's beak determines what it eats. Flamingos have a long, straight beak that is slightly curved (bends) with sharp points on the sides. This shape allows them to filter out the food they want to eat from the water. The long, straight beak is also used to filter out the water from the mud and sand.

Hummingbird
Hummingbirds eat a lot of insects, small fish, and nectar. They have a long, straight beak that is slightly curved (bends) with sharp points on the sides. This shape allows them to filter out the food they want to eat from the water. The long, straight beak is also used to filter out the water from the mud and sand.

BIRD BEAKS Name: _____

Pelican
Pelicans feed mostly on fish. To catch their prey, pelicans swing down on a surface of their beaks. Then they pull up the fish. Pelicans are not concerned to see in pain or discomfort, and they will often take advantage of a bird feeder where the water.

Hummingbird
Hummingbirds eat mostly small insects and nectar. These birds forage for nectar by hovering in the air. Hummingbirds are not concerned to see in pain or discomfort, and they will often take advantage of a bird feeder where the water.

Toucan
The toucan is a bird that primarily feeds on fruit. These birds use their beak to pick up the fruit and eat it. They also use their beak to dig for food in the ground or to eat it directly from the tree. Their beak is long enough to reach fruit on branches that wouldn't support the full weight of their body, and it has rounded edges that help to peel fruit. It's thought that the toucan's large beak may also play a role in courtship or self-defense.

Woodpecker
The woodpecker's beak is strong and the shape is suitable for use in drilling holes in wood. In order to protect the birds' brains, a thick, spongy part has developed to absorb the impact of the repeated blows. The woodpecker also has a long, sticky tongue that can be used to extract insects from the holes they have drilled.

Beak
The beak is an anatomical part of the bird's mouth that is used to catch, hold, and eat food. It is also used to dig for food, to build nests, and to defend against predators. The beak is a very important part of a bird's life.

Oystercatcher
Oystercatchers feed almost solely on clams, mussels, and scallops. To catch their prey, oystercatchers walk slowly through water, looking for one with an open shell. When they spot one, the bird uses its beak to crack it open and eat the meat inside. Some oystercatchers also scrape the shell open before eating the meat.
