

Comparison Of two Different Movies

Films, television, and other forms of media are often primarily seen as entertainment with little relevancy to real life situations, but I have always found these pieces of media to be a reflection and analysis of important issues. The story of a working-class protagonist entering an elite college prep school on a scholarship, and dealing with the attitudes of the upper-class students, is common in Hollywood films. School Ties and Finding Forrester both tell these stories from the perspective of the working-class student who has earned their spot through hard work and devotion to academic excellence. David Greene and Jamal Wallace are both sympathetic characters who face opposition in their prep school environments. They are also both minority characters in a primarily white upper-class Christian culture: David is Jewish, and Jamal is black. David and Jamal represent the ideal heroes of a meritocracy. Their positions are earned through their own individual abilities, not through being born into wealth and privilege. They both have to overcome adversity, in the form of antagonists who disrespect them due to their status as working-class minorities. These stories reinforce a narrative that claims anyone can enter the upper class through hard work and dedication, and thus favors meritocracy. The podcast Three Miles, however, presents a counter-narrative that challenges the Hollywood portrayal of the working-class student in the elite school and examines the reality these types of students face. Melanie and Jonathan, who are both teenagers from the Bronx who participate in an exchange program that allows students from a poor public school to tour an elite private school located just three miles away. Both teens face challenges when they are confronted with the stark differences between their lives and the lives of the private school students.

Voices of "The Dead" - Comparing Film and Literature Gertrud Schmitz, 2004-03-05 Seminar paper from the year 1990 in the subject English Language and Literature Studies Comparative Literature grade very good Ruhr University of Bochum English Seminar course Joyce Dubliners and Portrait Of The Artist As A Young Man language English abstract In the last paragraph of the introduction it is said what this paper does not do but the exact aim of the study is not stated This is of course not the ideal procedure how a Seminararbeit should be written without having a specific aim in mind My aim in fact was to compare Huston's film and Joyce's short story in a way that made it possible to express some of the fascinating details of both I did not know the results that this would lead to To take the concept of point of view which exists both in literary and filmic theory as a basis for comparison lead to a good and surprising result It offered a way to do exactly what I wanted that is simply to watch and to read In this way the different techniques of the film and the story began to crystallize or rather the way a reader or viewer was lead to an understanding The result was successful primarily because point of view offers a metaphor which comprises seeing as well as telling and captures a notion of subjectivity as well as objectivity If one needed to state the aim of the paper the best would be to say that it was not to be lead by an idea but to let the film and the story have the lead and to see how their differences and characteristics would single out and the concept of point of view is a concept which allows one to take up exactly that position as simply either a reader in the story or a viewer in the film
