KIND

Science fiction is characterized by concepts and theories that are not realities now, but could become realities with the passing of time and advancement of technology.

Authors of science fiction are especially effective when they balance complex and sophisticated details with relatable characters, word choices that are not too technical, and themes that are applicable to the readers' lives.

DIRECTIONS

Write an original narrative that conforms to science fiction conventions. Stories must conform to MLA guidelines and meet a minimum length of 1,000 words.
