

AP® Biology Laboratory 5 Cell Respiration

Objectives

- Measure the consumption of oxygen by respiring seeds
- Compare respiration rates at two different temperatures

Background

Many cellular processes require energy. Cellular cellular respiration supplies energy for the oxidation of glucose. This is a catabolic process involving a transfer of electrons (chemical energy) between molecules that proceed in series of steps and release products such as water and carbon dioxide.

Introduction

You will use a respirometer to measure the rate of respiration of germinating and nongerminating pea seeds at two different temperatures. The respirometer consists of a vial that contains the peas and a volume of air. The mouth of the vial is sealed with a rubber stopper that has a pipette inverted in it. The respirometer is submerged in water. If the peas are respiring they will use oxygen and release carbon dioxide. Since 1 mole of carbon dioxide is released for each mole of oxygen consumed, there is no change in the volume of gas in the respirometer. Lithoqual® is used for this purpose. Lithoqual is used because it does not react with oxygen gas but it reacts with carbon dioxide. You will alter the conditions by placing 1 volume of potassium hydroxide (KOH) in the vial. Potassium hydroxide reacts with carbon dioxide to form potassium carbonate, which is a solid.

Since the carbon dioxide produced is removed by reaction with potassium hydroxide, no oxygen is used by cellular respiration and volume of gas in the respirometer will decrease. As the volume of gas decreases, water will move into the pipette. You will use the decrease in volume, as indicated also made present on the paper, as a measure of the rate of cellular respiration.
