- 6.1 Identify how common techniques of microscopy and biochemistry are used in cell biology.
- 6.2 Compare and contrast (1) prokaryotic and eukaryotic cells and (2) animal and plant cells.
- 6.3 Describe the structure of the nucleus, chromosomes, and ribosomes, and explain their functions.
- 6.4 Identify the parts of the endomembrane system and describe their roles in the cell.
- 6.5 Compare and contrast the structures and functions of mitochondria and chloroplasts.
- 6.6 Describe the subunits and structures of the three types of cytoskeletal fibers and list their functions.
- 6.7 Compare and contrast (1) the extracellular components of plant and animal cells and (2) the cell functions of plant and animal cells.
- 6.8 Explain how the parts of a cell work together to enhance cellular function.

In high school biology, you probably learned all the cell parts and what they do. In this course, change your focus to understanding the importance of specialized organelles, how they function in normal cells, and what may occur if their function is disrupted.

Study Tip: Research clearly shows that when you make sketches, you remember details better. Follow the Study Tip suggestion, using an entire sheet of paper for an animal cell and another for a plant cell. Add structures and notes as you progress through each concept.

The diagram of the plant cell on the opening page of this chapter gives a visual overview of how plant cells are organized. Note that plant cells have a large central vacuole and may contain both chloroplasts and mitochondria. Draw a plant cell labeled with the structures mentioned in

Concept 6.1 Biologists use microscopes and biochemistry to study cells

LO 6.1: Identify how common techniques of microscopy and biochemistry are used in cell biology.

1. The study of cells has been limited by their small size, and so they were not seen and described until 1665, when Robert Hooke first looked at dead cells from the bark of an oak
