Constructions classées parmi les plus économes les piscines gagnent pour l'instant toute réglementation thermique et les coûts d'énergie y sont particulièrement élevés. Récemment l'actualité a changé la donne. Le CSTB au travers de CERTIVEA vient de sortir un référentiel HQE adapté aux opérations de construction neuves de piscines dans lequel il est préconisé de réduire de 50 % la consommation d'énergie calorifique. Les aides financières seront de plus en plus souvent attribuées en fonction de l'obtention de cette certification avec comme conséquence une accélération de la mise en œuvre de solutions performantes. Cet ouvrage richement illustré sort donc au bon moment. L'auteur y décrit plusieurs pistes de réduction des consommations d'énergie et d'eau permettant d'obtenir cette certification. De nombreuses solutions techniques sont proposées sur l'énergie, l'air, les bassins, l'eau, le bâtiment tandis que les principaux pièges à éviter sont répertoriés. L'auteur propose des solutions pour réduire les consommations d'énergie calorifique d'un facteur de 2 dans les constructions neuves par rapport aux équipements actuels. Une check list permet de faire un diagnostic très précis des piscines existantes avec la clé différentes voies d'amélioration possibles permettant de réduire aussi les consommations d'énergie calorifique de 35-40 %. Un chapitre est dédié à l'architecture bioclimatique qui diffère dans les piscines par rapport aux autres bâtiments et qui est le premier maillon dans la réduction de la consommation d'énergie calorifique. Un autre est consacré à la piscine du futur dont la conception devra clairement reposer sur les principes des constructions à architecture passive et des équipements ayant recours aux énergies renouvelables. La réduction de la consommation d'énergie calorifique pourrait atteindre un facteur de 3.

Capital, 2000 Bauen + Wohnen, 1963 Construire soi-même sa piscine Jean-Philippe Foray, 2006

L'auteur explique ce qu'il faut savoir avant de se lancer dans la réalisation d'une piscine : solutions techniques, budget, démarches, délais, etc. et décrit les différentes étapes de construction : pas à pas de la conception du projet au local technique en passant par le déroulement des travaux.
