Finally, the "global environmental" subcategory consists of other environmental effects, such as "decreased environmental quality, waste disposal, and global climate change." These authors measured these phenomena by quantifying the amount of cumulative environmental effects. Likewise, the "global environmental" subcategory is another self-constructed, more subtle environmental effect, measured by quantifying the amount of cumulative environmental effects.

The following table summarizes the distribution of the study participants across the various study observations and stratified by group assignment. Overall, older women older than 65 years had a higher rate of falls than did 50-64 year olds. This distribution is most strikingly apparent among patients who were initially categorized as "probable" community-dwelling geriatric patients, as evidenced by the 50-64 year old group. In this group, 75% of women were categorized as "probable" geriatric patients, as opposed to the 65-74 year old group, in which only 50% of women were categorized as "probable" geriatric patients. The 75-84 year old group had the highest rate of falls, with 85% of women categorized as "probable" geriatric patients.
