

Phase #2: Logical Design

Based on the diagram developed in the previous phase, convert the ERD into a set of well-structured (normalized through 3NF) table relations. Denote primary keys with an underline; denote foreign keys with a dotted-underline; denote a primary key that is also a foreign key with a double-underline.

Phase #3: Physical Design

Convert the table relations developed in the previous phase into a tabular data dictionary. Assume the target database management system (DBMS) is Microsoft SQL Server. An example is provided below:

Table Name: PUBLISHER
Column Name	Data Type	Constraints (PK, FK, NOT NULL, UNIQUE, CHECK, DEFAULT)
Publisher_ID	INT	PK, NOT NULL, UNIQUE
Name	VARCHAR(50)	NOT NULL

Phase #4: Database Implementation

Part I: SQL Data Definition Language (DDL) statements

Write SQL DDL statements to implement the database based on the data dictionary developed in the previous phase. Each table shall adhere to domain, entity, referential, and policy integrity. Be sure to include primary key, foreign key, nullability, uniqueness, check, and default constraints as necessary. In addition to implementing the database using SQL Server Management Studio, include the SQL statements to implement the database in your submission document.

Part II: SQL Data Manipulation Language (DML) statements

Write SQL DML statements to insert, at least, five records into each table. In addition to inserting the records into your database using SQL Server Management Studio, include the SQL statements to insert the records in your submission document.

Update the first user record to set the user's first name to your first name and the user's last name to your last name.
